Viral Protocols

(Part 11)

We have two viral protocols, Viral Disease and Viral Immunity. The Viral Disease protocol is for the treatment of significant acute viral infections where the Viral Immunity protocol is designed to prevent viral infections or to help the body create a strong resistance or immunity to most viral diseases. To understand how the viral immune protocol works or any of the infections disease protocols work we have to describe the method behind the protocol. I am sure that the actual mechanism is much more sophisticated than this explanation but I will try to state it in a way that we can all understand.

1. The immune system has different programs or systems that are designed to identify different pathogens within a classification, build a defense targeting them specifically and then destroying them.
2. Each of these immune programs are capable of addressing many different pathogens within a specific classification.
3. Any compromise in any one of these immune programs will make the patient very susceptible to any of the pathogens within that classification.
4. For example: we have only found one specific program for virus. So regardless of the virus or the disease it causes from Chicken Pox to Shingles to West Nile and so on we still have to treat the same thing, and that is the specific immune program that manages viral infections.
5. The different pathogen types such as bacteria, mold and fungus have multiple classifications and have different immune programs that control the different classes of these pathogens.
6. This means that we do not need hundreds of protocols to treat hundreds of different diseases. We only need as many different therapy programs as there are immune programs that control pathogens. At this point we believe there are only a few of these different programs making our jobs as health care providers much simpler.

We found some time ago that the protocol that we developed for West Nile was the ideal protocol for improving the viral component of the immune system. This is probably because West Nile is not a natural virus but a genetically engineered virus. The protocol to support the viral immunity component enough to manage or resolve a genetically engineered virus would raise the function of that system to manage all viral issues. This is why the majority of the viral therapies are built around the West Nile protocols. So regardless of the virus, the treatment may be very similar and or interchangeable because we are treating the program in the body that was designed to manage all viral issues.

However, not all viral infections have the same virulence. The Flu Virus program #682 or #032 in the Mk III Home therapy laser, usually does a great job on those conditions. But if you remember in part 9 of this series the viral infections of the flu are not usually the primary issue of the flu and these viral infections are secondary to other issues. This is why we still have multiple different programs for the same systems. Select the appropriate therapies depending on the patient and condition. Just remember that when treating viral infections any of the viral therapy programs will help so you can't pick the wrong program but you can pick the best one for that specific patient.
